Dear Sir

Having reviewed the controversy over the proposed moving of the county line between Kilkenny and Waterford in the Ferrybank area, I feel one of the most important facts in the case is that over 99% of earlier contributions have been against the proposal.

It would seem best then to propose an alternative method of administration for the area. I would suggest a local borough council, that would have permanent representation from Kilkenny (of course) but also from Waterford. This would provide permanent and direct communication in both ways between all concerned parties. Then specific issues and long-term plans could be dealt with in an ongoing way.

I know it may seem like this problem requires the wisdom of Solomon to resolve it, but really some fresh thinking and an abandonment of entrenched positions is all that's needed.

Regards

Paul Nolan
